Drugs such as marijuana appear to cause fast food and junk food sales to fall, but the numbers of Pueblo in Colorado have almost tripled three times among marijuana stores as business. The Mail on Sunday has recruited The 36th ‘high street’ stores selling marijuana already exists in the US, but a similar effort is underway in the UK to increase the temptation of the drug. In like the medical world. Douglas D’Souza, Professor of Criminology at Durham University, who has studied marijuana laws, said: ‘We have to be careful about who’s been in charge of regulating drugs, but the evidence does seem to indicate that the number of marijuana stores is increasing. One estimate made by the Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment found that the state had around 200 marijuana stores in 2013, compared to just over 100 in 2012. The number of marijuana stores in Colorado has increased by about 30% each year since 2012, according to the Denver Post. Marijuana sales have also increased, with the state’s sales tax rate on marijuana increasing from 12% in 2014 to 15.5% in 2018. This has helped to boost the local economy, with sales of marijuana products increasing by about 25% each year. The increase in sales is likely due to the increasing acceptance of marijuana, as well as the legalisation of marijuana for medical and recreational use in Colorado. However, it is also important to note that the increase in marijuana sales is also likely due to the increased availability of the drug, as well as the increased marketing and advertising of marijuana products. In addition, the increase in marijuana sales may also be due to the increased availability of marijuana products online, which has made it easier for people to purchase marijuana without having to go to a physical store. This has helped to increase the availability of marijuana, as well as the convenience of purchasing the drug. However, it is also important to note that the increase in marijuana sales is likely to have negative consequences, such as increased use of the drug, as well as the potential for addiction and other negative effects. It is important to monitor the effects of the increase in marijuana sales, as well as the increased availability of the drug, in order to ensure that the increase in marijuana sales is not leading to negative consequences.